

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM RABBI YITZI

PARSHAT MATOS-MASEI

What Great Women Teach Us

This week's Parsha, Matos-Maasei, ends with the Daughters of Tzelafchad, keeping the words of Hashem, marrying into their father's tribe, Menashe.

The Torah here mentions them by name for the third time, an honor which is bestowed on very few. Here too, Hashem chooses to close the book of Bamidbar, Numbers, with them. This clearly indicates that there is something about them that is central to the book of Bamidbar.

Machla, Tirtza, Chagla, Milka and Noa.

What are we meant to learn from these great women? How does it highlight the central theme of the book of Bamidbar?

The first thing to know about the daughters of Tzelafchad is that they were selfless. In the case they brought before the Jewish people, they did not ask for any personal gain but rather that the Torah law be fulfilled, that their father have a portion of the holy land named for him.

BE SELFLESS, BE PATIENT, BE FOCUSED, AND BE DEMANDING
OF G-D TO BRING
THE ULTIMATE REDEMPTION.

They were holy, righteous, learned, and wise. They were patient and waited until the fortieth year in the desert to make their case. They never took their eye off the goal to get their father his rightful part in the holy land.

The book of Bamidbar is all about making our way to the Holy Land. Which for us means not simply living in Israel but living there under Torah rule with the coming of Moshiach.

How do we accomplish this? First, by being learned and having the wisdom to understand our purpose. To be patient and do the necessary steps to bring it about, keeping our focus on our purpose. And finally, to stand before Hashem, now in the last moments of this exile and demand that justice be served, that He send Moshiach. Not for our personal gain but because it is what Hashem wants and what the Jewish people rightfully earned.

Hashem, being proud of the daughters of Tzelafchad, mentions them three times. If we act like them, He will surely be proud and send Moshiach. The time has come.

"Dear Rabbi Yitzi,

I love your messages, you're a great a rabbi and a blessing for the world! I love sharing your wisdom and I see the impact your messages of truth and love have on my followers from all types of backgrounds and faiths. The Rabbi has a fan here in South Florida!"
